playoff possibilities keep them from going down swinging this season. Dolphins linebacker Kiko Alonso touched off a fight in the third quarter of Sunday's game when he came in late on a sliding Josh Allen. Alonso kicked him in the head in the process and both teams came together to scuffle in the aftermath of the hit. That scuffle led to Bills right tackle Jordan Mills and Dolphins defensive end Robert Quinn being ejected from the contest as well. It's not the first time Alonso has made that kind of play and he notably nailed Ravens quarterback Joe Flacco in a 2017 game Tremaine Edmunds Jerseys Stitched , but he was neither ejected nor suspended for that shot. The actual game has swung back in the Bills' favor as they scored on their first possession of the third quarter and then forced a Ryan Tannehill fumble on a Shaq Lawson sack that set up another touchdown. It's now 28-14 in their favor with time running low in the third. The NFL has slowly cracked the door on gambling, after years of treating it as a boogeyman. The Bills are ready to run through that door and start grabbing the money that's behind it. According to Tom Precious of the

, officials from Pegula Sports and Entertainment (which owns the Bills and the NHL Sabres) were working the state assembly, with the goal of getting in-stadium gambling approved. A measure to allow online sports betting in New York is being discussed. Team representatives were in Albany yesterday to make sure they were heard by state government. They've also hired a lobbying firm for $7

," company spokesman Don Heins said in a statement. They did add that those lobbying efforts were unrelated to their stadium project. Sports gambling has been approved for four casinos in New York, but more legislative work would be needed to approve the kind of online sports wagering that would allow fans to bet from their seats. NFL owners know that gambling is the next great frontier (of revenue)
